BRINGING YOUR NEW BULLS HOME

We strongly recommend that you have some other cattle in the yards to welcome your new bulls to avoid stressing them. Bulls will take some time to adjust to a new location and to new grazing conditions. The impact of temperature, humidity and unfamiliar pastures/feeds all contribute to reduce feed intake and lead to weight loss and to fertility depression. As part of the planning around bull purchases, it is worth considering how nutrition can be maintained while bulls acclimatise to new locations. In some cases, it may be providing access to good quality forage along with better pastures for a few weeks while bulls adjust. It may also require re-thinking paddocks to help bulls adjust to the temperatures of a new location. It is worth recognising that the stresses of sale and transport, along with adjusting to a new location will take some time for bulls to recover from. By planning to minimise the impacts these have, the period of time where bulls may be less fertile can be potentially reduced.
